Consensus and Group Judgments: Perspectives from Philosophy and Economics

Seminar SoSe 2019

LECTURERS
Prof. Dr. Stefan Napel
Prof. Dr. Olivier Roy

OBJECTIVE
Attitudes like beliefs and preferences are routinely attributed to groups. A jury can be said to believe the accused to be guilty, or a professional board can officially voice its disapproval of certain practices by its members. There are two main paradigms in philosophy and economics on the formation of such collective attitudes: the deliberative and the aggregative views. On the deliberative view, group attitudes stem from a consensus reached after a structured exchange of opinions. On the aggregative view, group attitudes are formed by putting together the possibly diverging views of individuals, through a formal voting procedure for instance.

The aim of this seminar is threefold. First, the students will understand the respective importance of the deliberative and the aggregative view in the broader philosophical landscape, and especially in political philosophy and in epistemology. Second, they will gain familiarity with various mathematical and economic models of, and results about deliberation and aggregation. Finally, they will be able to assess the philosophical significances of these models and results for our understanding of collective attitudes.
